A CONFERENCE RESULTING.

Washington, D. C., Feb. 29.—[Special.]—The Inter-State Commerce Committee finished their consideration of the Abercrombie bill this morning, and decided to report it to the House with a few amendments. It was also decided to ask to have the bill taken from the calendar to-morrow, and to have it considered on Monday next. There were many changes made in the bill as it was originally reported from the committee, but these were most changes from the views of Senator Cullom, who introduced the bill. It was agreed to by a majority of one, and the members are not now disposed to make public the vote. Each committee reserves the right to offer amendments in the House. The most important of the committee amendments were those providing that the provisions of the bill shall not apply to the transportation of property for the United States Government, or for State governments, or for the District of Columbia, and that the provisions of the bill shall not apply to the transportation of property by water when such transportation is subject to the regulation of the Inter-State Commerce Commission. The provision in the bill prohibiting the pooling of freights was stricken out, and a provision substituted which prohibits any common carrier from charging or receiving any greater compensation in the aggregate for the transportation of passengers or property, or the use of cars, or vessels, for the transportation of passengers or property, or any service in connection therewith, between points within the United States, or between points within the United States and points in adjacent foreign countries, when such transportation is subject to the provisions of this act, than the aggregate of the charges made for like

BLOOD IN MICHIGAN.

The Tragedy Near Jackson That Produced Six Corpses and the End in Jail Yet.

The Quack Family Shot Them Locks Behind the Right Hands Way Up.

Interview With Kenny, the Avenger—Supposed Explosion at the Shooting of Kenny.

JACKSON, Mich., Feb. 29.—[Special Correspondence.]—The Jackson County (Michigan) tragedy almost culminated in the history of crime, reminded the night of Nov. 21, 1882, in the Township of Spring Arbor, but resulted in the death of six persons and the severe injury of another. The latter tragedy had as its victims Rev. D. Crouch, a wealthy farmer, 72 years of age; his daughter, a woman of extreme old maidenhood, Miss Emma Wixom; the son-in-law, Henry Wixom, and a farmer named Jacob Kenny. Two lingering and gross but successful attempts of the destruction of the babies and the results of the homicide.

This horrid crime occurring, as it did, in a country neighborhood, because of its eccentricity completely paralyzed the authorities. The failure to make complete control of the guilty has until recent date had painfully suspended upon the three arrests which, as often foretold since that being criminals to justice proved most thoroughly exonerated the community and the officers by whom they were instigated to proceed with the case was shown to the action of the Coroner. This officer summoned a jury several days. It did not require the ages, and then, having a fine and plain for a meeting on Jackson, night after noon, at once took the jury "around the" and started the hearse. It was left to the decision of one of the jurors to suggest that it was the duty of the jury to view the bodies of the dead.

The scene had carefully planned and perfectly executed, its awful secret to hold of the beginning of the search for the perpetrators. Its details the progress made in this. Thursday noon, of interest was most frustrated by the Sheriff, acting under the advice of the Prosecuting Attorney, it is said, making a compromise agreement with Jacob Kenny, a servant of Mrs. Wixom, against John Kenny, a servant of Mrs. Wixom, confessed complicity with the shooting in the middle. Kenny, although making a public charge, gave no information regarding the guilt of his own son. There was an evidence against him and he was soon discharged.

SUSPECT APPREHENDED.

The results of the hasty action have not yet ceased to affect the community. It led to the destruction the confidence of people and to the scattering members of the Crouch family has brought into excess. It intensified the suspicion that beginning to arise that there guilty parties to the crime. It is said that the Sheriff, in pursuance of according to the [illegible] week, had resolved to part of his detectives down the northern County from the county of Hugh, confidently trusted upon the slightest hint of evidence to be on the ground quite hourly, also telling has proved from day to day until it was to positively said that a large majority of the people of Jackson County believe the lives of the Crouch property to be the parties guilty of the crime. It was about this opinion was gaining ground that the sudden death of the Kenny Wixom occurred.

A Tuesday morning Sheriff went to Jackson, and the general feeling of the men finding their the absence of Jackson County rode down Kenny's residence, and the latter, on a [illegible] evidently to be [illegible] of the [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

LITERATURE.

The Last Addition to the "Famous Women Series"—Maria Edgeworth.

Dr. Baltzmann's New Book on His Re-searches and Discoveries at Troy.

Travel and Sport among the Wild Tribes of the Southern Seas of Asia.

Maria Edgeworth.

Miss Maria Edgeworth, whose name should be and is inseparably associated with that of her father, is the subject of the last addition to the "Famous Women Series," just issued by Roberts Brothers, Boston. Miss Edgeworth's career as a literary woman was a singularly successful one, and her life was a singularly happy one. Her father, Richard Lovell Edgeworth, was a man of many parts, and of many interests, and his daughter's life was largely influenced by his. Miss Edgeworth was born in Oxfordshire, England, in 1767, and was the eldest child of Richard Lovell Edgeworth's second marriage. Her mother died when she was but a year old, and the child was left to the care of her father's third wife, Elizabeth Sneyd, a woman of strong character, who was a severe disciplinarian, and who, it is said, was not altogether kind to her husband's children by his former wives. Maria Edgeworth's own mother was a woman of gentle character, and of considerable literary ability, and her daughter's life and work were largely influenced by her mother's memory. Miss Edgeworth's own account of her early years is very meager, and the present writer of this sketch has been unable to find any other. She was educated at home, and her father's friends were the world's noblest and most distinguished men. Among the number were Dr. Darwin, Thomas Day, and Thomas Beddoes, all of whom were men of strong views, and decided characters, and some of whom were considered by the world at large as eccentric. Miss Edgeworth's own account of her father's friends is very interesting, and shows the influence which they had upon her own character. She says: "Dr. Darwin was the first celebrated author whom I remember to have seen. He was the first philosopher who ever conversed with me, and the first poet who ever read his poetry to me. Mr. Day, the author of 'Sandford and Merton,' was the first person who ever talked to me seriously of the principles of religion and morality, and who ever inculcated the practice of self-government, self-denial, and perseverance in the pursuit of knowledge. Mr. Beddoes was the first philosopher who ever explained to me the principles of chemistry, and who ever made experiments in my presence. Mr. Edgeworth was the first person who ever taught me to read, and who ever undertook to teach me to write. He was the first person who ever gave me a lesson in arithmetic, and who ever explained to me the principles of the first mechanical powers. He was the first person who ever showed me the construction of a model of a steam-engine, and who ever explained to me the principles of hydrostatics. He was the first person who ever showed me the process of drawing a landscape in perspective, and who ever explained to me the principles of the art of painting. He was the first person who ever showed me the process of drawing a map, and who ever explained to me the principles of land-surveying. He was the first person who ever showed me the process of turning, and who ever explained to me the principles of the lathe. He was the first person who ever showed me the process of modeling in clay, and who ever explained to me the principles of sculpture. He was the first person who ever showed me the process of mending a watch, and who ever explained to me the principles of clock and watch work. He was the first person who ever showed me the process of making a pair of shoes, and who ever explained to me the principles of the construction of the human foot. He was the first person who ever showed me the process of making a coat, and who ever explained to me the principles of the construction of the human body. He was the first person who ever showed me the process of making a pair of trousers, and who ever explained to me the principles of the construction of the human leg. He was the first person who ever showed me the process of making a pair of gloves, and who ever explained to me the principles of the construction of the human hand. He was the first person who ever showed me the process of making a pair of stockings, and who ever explained to me the principles of the construction of the human foot. He was the first person who ever showed me the process of making a pair of boots, and who ever explained to me the principles of the construction of the human foot. Fair Words.

The discussion that just now springs up every winter in the agricultural journals relative to the advisable method in the management of cattle and very likely end in every way worthy the attention of intelligent men, and it is to be hoped that they may result in producing benefit to the breeding interest. That the methods are varied, that the moral tone of those directly interested has been greatly improved for the consequence to which reputed ex-cellent have arrived, there can be no question; but while there are being constantly discovered there are other ideas, if not as valuable, are a source of much loss to those the immediately interested, both to a pecuniary loss and to the detriment of the principal objects for which these associations were organized. The idea to which reference is made is that of exhibiting cattle under fairs of excitement, and that any premium is of economic and of humane policy.

It is a report of one of the Farmers' Societies of the existence the list of premiums shows an excessive distribution of the amount of the entire fund appropriated, and an evidence that there were given a comparative number of premiums to each class. But this is shown by the fact that the premiums of the first class of a given breed got only a little more than those of the second, and the second little more than those of the third, and so on, making but the amount of the premium for each class of animals, and the difference between the first and second premiums for the different classes of animals. Now, this is a system of awarding premiums which is calculated to do more harm than good. It is a system which encourages the exhibition of animals that are not worthy of premiums, and which discourages the exhibition of animals that are worthy of premiums

The Clothing School, and the Women Who Attend Its Sessions.

Interesting Views Expressed by a Shop-Girl and a Professional Cook.

The Necessity for a Change in Our Present System of Domestic Service.

New York, Feb. 29.—[Special Correspondence.] A great deal has lately been said in regard to industrial schools and training schools for boys and young women, the former to be supported by the government out of funds and the latter to be instituted by clubbing and working. A special commission in California on this subject has reported in favor of establishing this, schools of this kind in that State. The writer has been anxious to say something on this subject, but have always been crowded by other matters which have demanded it, and here never had an opportunity of seeing the workings of the so-called industrial schools for girls, that bring the end in which I am especially the most interested. But hearing recently of an attempt at this sort of school here, and learning that there was a working school ready to co-operate for the instruction of those girls and the greater number of women who are obliged to work all day and who have therefore no opportunity of doing housework for the domestic needs and comforts which almost them to cook after the fashion of mothers, grandmothers, or aunts, I determined, if possible, to see for myself with how much reason or prospect of success the plan of these schools was advocated, and what was to be learned. I therefore sought to become a member of one, a member of the Working Girls' Home Club, which has had this department directly in charge. This Association divides the expenses under the hall, pays for the necessary utensils and supplies the instructors.
